WORK FROM HOME POLICY FOR NEW MOTHERS

Policy Purpose

To empower New Mothers at AGL with greater flexibility at workplace, so that they can take care of their Kid's well-being in formative years in case of missing support infrastructure at home.

To that end, we will be implementing a Work from Home Policy to allow eligible employees to work from a remote office location approved by the management, subject to certain conditions. Acceptance of this Work from Home Policy does not alter your duties, obligations, responsibilities and/or conditions of employment with AGL unless specifically agreed upon in writing. Use of the Work from Home Policy is subject to the following conditions:

Eligibility

All full-time female employees who have completed 180 days of employment may be eligible to work remotely for up to one year following the completion of 26 weeks of maternity leave. However, this is not an automatic entitlement and requires formal notification from the employee, along with approval from their Reporting Manager (RM).

Not all roles within AGL are suitable for remote work. Employees must discuss their responsibilities and obligations with their manager to assess whether their role aligns with the company's remote work policy. In cases where an employee's role requires physical presence in the office, they will not be eligible for the post-maternity WFH option. If feasible, a transition to another suitable role or department may be considered.

Additionally, the company reserves the right to withdraw WFH permission at any time if adherence to WFH decorum is found to be unprofessional or unmanaged. The WFH benefit can be availed flexibly within the one-year period, subject to managerial approval and business requirements.

Designated Workspace

Employees working from home (WFH) are expected to maintain professional work ethics and ensure full availability during their designated working hours. It is essential that employees designate a proper and distraction-free workspace at home to carry out their responsibilities with sincerity, dedication, and efficiency.

Additionally, employees may be required to participate in "Video ON" meetings as part of their professional duties. To ensure a seamless experience, they must plan their work setup in advance, ensuring appropriate surroundings and minimal disruptions.

Employees are responsible for maintaining a stable internet connection and reliable mobile network to support their work requirements. In the event of technical issues, including computer malfunctions or internet disruptions that hinder remote work, the employee must immediately notify their manager. Repeated or prolonged connectivity issues that impact work performance may result in a requirement to work from the office until the issue is resolved.

Furthermore, employees working remotely may be required to report to their assigned office location or client site periodically, based on business needs and mutual discussions with their manager.

Failure to adhere to these terms, including unavailability during working hours, inadequate workspace setup, or ongoing technical disruptions, may result in the revocation of WFH privileges at the company's discretion.

Remote Meetings

Employees working from a designated workspace/remotely will be expected to attend all essential meetings via video conference or by phone.

Rules and Policies

All of AGL's rules and policies, including those set forth in the company's Employee Handbook, apply while WFH. These policies include, but are not limited to, policies regarding attendance, confidentiality, and policies prohibiting harassment. Employees are reminded that this Work from Home Policy is not to be used in place of sick leave, etc. Company is not responsible for any expenses related to remote work during this period.

Employees doing WFH must understand that their computers and the internet will be monitored by AGL through third party tools during their work time.

Official Work Time

Employees must adhere to their regular assigned work schedule, unless an alternative arrangement has been discussed and formally approved by their manager. Personal responsibilities, such as childcare, elder care, or household appointments (e.g., repair services), should be managed in a way that does not interfere with the employee's designated working hours.

In cases where an exception is required, employees are expected to provide sufficient prior notice to their team, manager, and/or client to ensure proper planning and minimal disruption to business operations.

Remuneration

The WFH benefit will not impact the existing CTC structure. However, the manager needs to validate every month before payroll through a proper timesheet approval mechanism regarding completion of work responsibilities while WFH.

Appraisals

Extended WFH due to family compulsions is considered an exception and, as such, annual appraisals for employees in these cases may differ from those who regularly attend the office in person. However, this does not apply to employees availing WFH as part of their maternity leave transition.

Any female employee on maternity leave, planning to take maternity leave, or recently returning from maternity leave will not face any impact on their appraisals due to their WFH arrangement. The organization remains committed to providing a supportive and inclusive work environment, ensuring a smooth transition for new mothers while maintaining fairness in performance evaluations.

Confidentiality and Security

Employees working remotely are reminded that even if they are working from home, they are bound by any confidentiality and/or security agreements they signed in connection with their employment with AGL, and any confidentiality and/or security policies contained in the company's Employee Handbook. Thus, consistent with company's expectations of information security for employees working in the office, remote employees will be expected to ensure the protection of proprietary company and customer information accessible from their home office.
